Ask a Silly Question

Scientists, who have so many things to inventigate they don't know where to begin, have discovered another hitherto unrecognized law of nature. It's called the "speech duration phenomenon."

As a result of about a decade of dedi-cated research, they we found that, in an interview-type situation, "the length of response by the interviewed individual is positively associated with the duration of the interviewer's speech "unit."

Now, reports a paper in Science mag-azine, it has turned up in an unexpected place — the presidential news confer-ence. It is unexpected because this is a situation where the answers, as well as the questions, are more or less prepared in advance.

Nevertheless, a statistical study of 61 of President Kennedy's press conferences in 1961-63 revealed that the longer the reporters yakked, the longer the President yakked back. And the mora concisely they framed their queries, by golly, the briefer he was in reply.
